

Amanda Cienkus

Senior Account Manager

Amanda loves pretty buildings. As a high school student in Memphis, Tennessee, she took a drafting course and dreamed of a career in architecture. And now, as a senior account manager for Taylor Johnson, Amanda's dream has come full circle because she's working with real estate developers and others in the real estate industry on a daily basis.

After graduating from Christian Brothers University with a bachelor's degree in Economics and Finance, Amanda began her career as economic development manager for the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce, where she managed a $5 million capital investment campaign and created a comprehensive relocation program to provide incentives and assistance to corporations relocating employees to the Fort Worth area. She then transitioned to a role as public affairs manager for Motorola, where she drove media relations for the Fort Worth site. While there, she developed and implemented an internal "Give Back" program to support Motorola's involvement in the "Call to Protect" national domestic abuse awareness campaign. That program resulted in the collection of more than 2,000 used cell phones to donate to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

Amanda joined Taylor Johnson in 2018 as senior account manager and she's responsible for managing the public relations strategy for her assigned clients.

In her spare time, Amanda spends time with her husband, Matt, and their three children, who range in age from 13 to 27. The family enjoys boating, waterskiing, hiking, traveling, playing tennis and scuba diving.