Senior Account Manager

Jeremy's passion for writing began in high school in his hometown of Springfield, Ill., covering sports for the student newspaper, where he infamously – and correctly – predicted the homecoming football game that he was covering would end in a 56-0 loss for his school.

He would go on to receive his undergraduate degree in journalism and mass communication and political science from Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, followed by a one-year fellowship in the Illinois Governor's Press Office. He subsequently earned a master's degree in public administration from Saint Louis University. Jeremy moved to Chicago in 2000 to work for a sports leagues and events internet startup that quickly went "dot bust," and then shifted his career focus to marketing and communications in the advocacy and public policy space. Over the years, he has led public relations and media strategy for several large national associations and nonprofits, including the American Bar Association, National Multiple Sclerosis Society and AARP.

In 2019, Jeremy jumped into the commercial real estate arena, joining international firm Cushman Wakefield (CW), where he was responsible for media relations in Chicago and several other Midwest and East region markets, including Minneapolis, Boston and Washington, D.C. He hired and worked collaboratively with Taylor Johnson to strategically publicize CW's standing as the leading industrial brokerage in the market as well as the company's expansion in the areas of multifamily, co-living and co-working. Jeremy joined Taylor Johnson in 2021 as a senior account manager.

In his spare time, Jeremy is an international travel junky who loves to walk the streets of new cities he visits with camera in hand, snapping photos of architectural wonders, parks and monuments. He is an avid runner and has competed in marathons and triathlons. He also channels his enthusiasm for humor, politics and sports through satire writing.
